

Call for papers – Paris, December 11 2023

The Banque de France is organizing a workshop on “Macroeconomic and Financial Implications of Commodity Market Fluctuations” in its headquarters in Paris, on December 11.

Background and Objective:

Following the war in Ukraine, commodity market issues have become focal points for policy makers. The objective of this workshop is to bring together researchers that work on the intersection of macro-financial economics and commodity markets.

Keynote speakers:

- Christiane Baumeister, Professor of Economics, University of Notre Dame
- Ivan Petrella, Professor of Economic, Warwick Business School

We encourage submissions from academic researchers as well as researchers from central banks and other institutions.

Topics include, but are not limited to:

- Commodity price fluctuations
- Macroeconomic impact of commodity shocks
- Ukraine invasion and the impact of energy shocks
- Supply chain disruptions linked to commodity shocks
- Financial stability and commodity price volatility
- Commodity derivative markets

Submissions:

Please submit a full script of your paper (PDF) to Arthur.STALLA-BOURDILLON@banque-france.fr. The deadline for submissions is September 29, 2023. Only papers submitted by the deadline will be considered. There is no registration fee for the workshop. Limited funding for presenters from academic institutions (excluding central banks and institutions) is available. Please communicate in your submission if you require financial assistance for travel and accommodation.
